Veterans Reminded of State Educational Aid

Oregon war veterans returning to summer school this week and next were reminded this week of their possible entitlement to state educational aid benefits.

Raymond E. Pettey, educational officer for the state Department of Veterans' Affairs, said eligible veterans should apply for their state benefits when they register in school.

Pettey also warned World War II veterans that December 31 is the last day they may start schooling under the state program. There is no deadline for Korean veterans.

Application for state aid may be made at the school, through county veterans' service officers, or from the state veterans' department, the administering agency, at State Finance building, Salem, or at the State Office building, Portland.

Veterans must have been Oregon residents for one year immediately prior to their service during World War II or the Korean conflict. Korean veterans must have served in the Korean theater.

'Education' or Not 'Education'

A new outgrowth of the expansion of the state colleges of education was brought into focus at the most recent meeting of the State Board of Higher Education. At that time Chancellor John R. Richards announced that a proposal to drop "of Education" from the names of Southern and Eastern Oregon Colleges of Education would be presented at the next board meeting in July. As of now the administration at OCE would like to maintain its present name.

I am fully in favor of maintaining the name of Oregon College of Education, if the other two school manage to get the change of their names. OCE will remain primarily a college preparing teachers. Even the addition of the liberal arts and two year professional programs does little to change the emphasis. In fact, it is the graduate program in education that is growing.

However, SOCE and EOCE could conceivably drift more towards offerings in a wider field because they are the only colleges in their area which can offer them. They would offer classes in fields similar to those handled by private colleges and the state schools located here in the valley and at Portland. This would enable them to more nearly serve the needs of the students living in their geographic areas.

Thus, though teacher education would be an essential part of the curriculum at SOC and at EOC, it would have far more emphasis at OCE. By retaining its present name, OCE would achieve a prominent singularity which would be of advantage to the college.

"Of Education" marks a college as one primarily involved in preparing its students for the teaching profession, a profession of which we should be justifiably proud. OREGON before the "of Education" marks the school as one of which we can also be justifiably proud.

We welcome any "letters to the editor" upon the issue. Though the final decision rests in the hands of the State Board, opinions of faculty, students, alumni and friends of the colleges will have an influence upon their decision.

Dr. Sherburne Named New Extension Dean

Dr. J W Sherburne, head of the department of psychology at Oregon State College, is to become dean of the general extension division of the state system of higher education, it was announced Sunday by Chancellor John R. Richards.

Sherburne's name was formally presented for approval to the state board of higher education at its regular session in Portland Tuesday. The appointment is effective September 1. Sherburne moves into the post now occupied by Dr Philip G Hoffman, who has been nominated as dean of the faculty for Portland State College by President J F Cramer.

The general extension division operates the state-wide evening class programs in 60 towns annually, correspondence study, visual instruction department, the Portland night classes and summer session, institute of international affairs, radio station KOAC and other off-campus activities of the state system of higher education. It also coordinates collegiate offerings at Central Oregon community college at Bend.

Sherburne, who has been at OSC since 1938, except for World War II service as an army major, succeeded the late O R Chambers as head of the psychology department in 1961. He is a native of Ohio, has a bachelor's degree from Greenville college, a master's degree from the University of Michigan, and the PhD degree from Ohio State university, where he taught psychology for four years before coming to Corvallis. From 1929 to 1934 he was superintendent of schools at Lane, South Dakota.

ASSEMBLY NOTE

The OSC Forestry Department will be on campus to present a colored slide and lecture program. This event takes place at 11 a.m. on Tuesday June 19, in the Campbell hall auditorium. This program is designed to inform the audience about the forestry program on Oregon.

SHOW and TELL

Tuesday night's concert by the Eugene Gleemen was well attended and greatly enjoyed by the summer school students. The program included sacred classics, current favorites, folk music and songs taken from light opera. Dr. Kratt, conductor, and the 75 Eugene businessmen who compose the group are to be congratulated upon the outstanding service they are rendering throughout the state. They present a very fine and entertaining program.

Often times we forget to thank, but never fail to appreciate the fine arrangements that Mrs. Heath kindly furnishes for each assembly. For the student body and faculty, we hereby bestow our thanks.

A bouquet of roses should go to Sally Edgar, Blanche Christensen and Eva Kahoff for the fine job of planning and carrying out the reception that followed the Eugene Gleemen program Tuesday evening.

Scholarship Gifts Accepted for OCE

The state board of higher education accepted $428,107.67 in gifts and grants at its regular meeting in Portland Tuesday, and approved 92 personnel changes for its eight campuses.

Largest gift was $200,000 from an anonymous donor to be known as "The Dr. Lawrence Selling Fund." Income from the fund is to be used for medical research at the designation of the dean of the Medical School.

Gifts to Oregon College of Education totaled $25218 from the following donors for scholarships: Yakima Indian Agency, Washington, $200; Monmouth Civic club, $150; Independence Women's club, $150; Central Lions club, $100; Oregon Congress of Parents and Teachers.

10,000 Expected in Portland for NEA

Some 10,000 members of the teaching profession will converge upon Portland July 1 for the six-day meeting of the 94th session of the National Education Association (NEA) Representative Assembly. General sessions, group meetings and receptions are scheduled to occupy 44 of Portland's centrally located buildings during the week.

The convention will consist of more than 5000 members of state and local education organizations who have been selected to represent their associations at business and action sessions. Delegates will come from all of the 48 states, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Alaska and Puerto Rico.

In addition, another 5000 educators are expected to be on hand for general sessions, seminars and discussion groups dealing with current educational problems and for sessions of an additional 27 affiliated associations that meet annually in connection with the NEA Representative Assembly.

A feature of the convention will be extensive educational exhibits of school equipment and supplies. These displays, which will occupy the entire lower level of the Portland Public Auditorium, represent the efforts of the nation's business firms to make available to the profession information on the most up-to-date school materials being produced in the country today.

This year will be the first time in 20 years that the "City of Roses" has played host to an annual convention of the NEA, which, with its membership of three-quarters of a million educators, is the largest professional organization in the world.

Dr. Donald S. Humphrey graduated from East high school in Sioux City, Iowa. He was an original member of the Naval ROTC unit at Oregon State college for two years.

He then attended State University of Iowa and received his bachelor degree in 1949.

He entered the University of Washington to obtain his master's degree in education. He received his master's degree in 1950, having majored in physical education with a guidance minor.

Dr. Humphrey taught part time in the physical education department at the University of Washington while working for his master's degree. It was the fall of 1950 when he came to OCE.

He taught for two years in the OCE science department (labs, etc.) Then taking a leave of absence he worked for four years to obtain his Ph.D. in zoology at Oregon State college. This extra time was needed to get undergraduate and other preparatory work for this field.

Dr. Humphrey now has a minor in general science and botany. His doctoral thesis on his research, "Chromosomes of the Northwest Ambystomid Salamanders," will be up for publication this summer. The most interesting thing about his research was the discovery of a new chromosome number in the Ambystomid Salamander.

At present he has work in progress concerning cytogenetics. His interest is in the evolutionary implications of the salamander.

Rules of Conduct and Hints for Grade School Observations Listed

Observation is an art—if you avoid: arriving late (or leaving early); taking the role of the expert; breathing down the students' necks; back-of-the-room conversation; taking too much of the teacher's class time; escaping to another world (sleeping.)

Concentrate on These Ideas

- Observe with a purpose—decide what it is you are looking for; look for answers to specific questions; focus on your purpose for observing; you may want to look for such things as: Teacher-student planning procedures, student relationships, evidence of social learning or self-discipline, use of learning materials and aids.
- Observe the students—their activities and behavior are very important in the class room situation. If you concentrate all your attention on the teacher you may not notice that what the teacher is doing relates to what the students are doing. There are no "best" procedures for every classroom situation.
- Remain an observer—students are accustomed to observers in the classroom. If you interrupt them in their work, however, they will not be able to operate in the usual way.
- Follow through—if it is possible, observe a group in several activities. Visit a class a number of times; no one class, on a given day, will give the whole picture. You may wish to visit at several different grade levels in order to observe student growth and development. You may also wish to arrange a conference with the teacher to obtain additional information.
- Generalize with caution—impressions need to be backed with evidence. Reserve judgment until you are satisfied that what you find is typical. Be a critical observer, trying to analyze why things are happening.

Dr. William S. Wagner, director of student teaching, states: "It is our desire to help you with your observations. If you see stimulates your thinking, the major purpose of your observation has been served. All students and teachers at the elementary school thank you for your cooperation. May we invite you to come back again?"
